

Abstract

An apparatus and a method for measuring print quality in a printing press used in newspaper production, wherein the measuring apparatus measures several parallel reflection profiles extending in the longitudinal direction simultaneously across the entire width of a paper web and the measurement results of the measuring apparatus are used for the detection of waste and for the adjustment of inking in the printing press in real time.

(FIG. 1)